ALREADY vs YET IN QUESTIONS

Both already and yet can be used in questions:

(a) Have you already cleaned your room?

(b) Have you cleaned your room yet?

Already in a question often expresses surprise; in sentence (a), the speaker is surprised that you have cleaned your room. It is sooner than expected.

Yet in a question is more neutral; in sentence (b) the speaker just wants to know whether you have cleaned your room. The speaker is not expecting that you have done it, nor is he/she expecting that you haven't.